Brown, 39, took an entrepreneurial step in 2000 when he founded his own law firm without any clients. He was profitable in his first year and in 2003 Begos & Horgan conveyed an interest in his practice and the two firms merged. Brown took a central role in the growing litigation practice of the firm. It has increased 50 percent since the merger. He was also chosen by UnumProvident Corp., the nation's largest disability insurer, to be one of a select group of lawyers to represent the company in the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in shaping the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA) and he founded RiverSide West, a business/legal cooperative providing a multidisciplinary approach to problem solving.
